From the Rotary News Room

South Asia, home to three of the world's four remaining polio endemic countries, is addressing the lingering challenges of polio eradication through revamped strategies, including stepped-up immunization activities. India, which has the highest incidence of indigenous polio in the region, is responding to an outbreak that has caused 323 cases of polio this year, 269 of them coming from just one state, Uttar Pradesh.

According to health officials, India's outbreak stems from a failure to immunize all children in states affected by polio. Many parents, especially in poor Muslim communities, are reluctant to have their children immunized because of false rumors that the oral polio vaccine is contaminated...

...a coordinated, intergovernmental response would help address challenges common to Afghanistan and Pakistan. Both countries are polio endemic and have reported 26 and 20 cases of polio this year, respectively. Lawlessness, a leading cause of low immunization rates along the Afghanistan-Pakistan border, could be jointly tackled, Khan says. In Bangladesh and Nepal, which were polio-free until they were reinfected with a strain of poliovirus from neighboring India, volunteers and health workers are determined to make the imported cases of polio a temporary setback to their efforts.

"We face many difficulties, but the support given by government and Rotary International have made us even more determined to stop imported polio from spreading in our country," says Iftekharul Alam, chair of the Bangladesh National PolioPlus Committee.
